LIFE-GUARDING LAW WANTED. THE EVENING WORLD asked yesterday letter, in next Monday's if the latest local lesson in horror, that of | World." the Hotel Royal burning, was to be read in vain. To this question the answer will be a plain affirmative unless the steps are promptly taken towards averting the occurrence of such another catastrophe. After every event similar to that of Sunday morning there is the same cry : 'Another fire-trap gone." It appears that an outburst of flame and a harvest of painful death is needed to cause a realizing sense of the existence of these traps. "Another burned." and there are more yet left. And what is being done about it? Trusting that some day they will all have burned themselves out?

There the point of the matter is reached Our laws are making as sure as possible that hotel buildings and other structures where many human lives are put in trust shall, as they are erected from time to time, in these days, be safe and strong, mably fire-proof and having adequate means of escape for those who go into them. But these laws do practically nothing for the improvement of buildings put up before the statutes in question

The Park place disaster, the Hotel borror and other events which may be recalled show how utterly inadequate to meet the great issue are the local provisions for the inspection of buildings and the requirement of fire-escapes. It has been plainly shown that, though there is plenty of the letter of responsibility here, there is a sore lack of responsibility st

The way to turn, then, for a remedy is plainly to the source of the State laws. The statutes must be amended so that they will apply as effectively to existing structures as to those yet to be built. Such law-making has hitherto been attempted half-heartedly. "rope in each room" statute. knocked out in the courts after its enactment, was a weak legislative effort which failed to meet any essential point in the

The law must be made strong to enforce requirements in the way of alterations, of efficient fire-escapes, of vigitant watchmen, of adequate means for alarming guests at the first call, and means, also, for fighting fire in its incipient stages.

It will be published, with the winning "Allowance," Not " Salary."

To the Editor :
Wives who love their husbands are only too happy to spend their time and energy in making home happy. It ought to be (and most frequently is) a labor of love and entirely beyond price.

On the other hand, all men like to see their wives look well, and no wife can appear bright and happy it harassed and annoyed by the want of a few dollars.

I think all wives should have stated allowances for dress and other expenses as generous as the husbands can consistently afford. Not having this allowance leads to extravagance, or, perhans, on the nart of the war-

Not having this allowance leads to extrava-gance, or, perhaps, on the part of the over-sensitive wife, great economizing and conse-quent unhappiness bordering on marrydom. If husbands understood their wives they would surely not hesitate about allowing them some spending money which they can call their own. It is only fair to the wife and gives her a happy feeling of independence. Husbands do not understand how mortifying it is to women to be obliged to ask for every The word "salary" for a wife is objection-ble. An allowance is better, and that she
